The crew of the new U.S. Navy aircraft carrier USS Enterprise has named the ship's first two officers. The Enterprise joins an increasing number of U.S. Navy ships bearing female and male officers. Vice Adm. Tom Ostebo has been named commanding officer and Capt. Sarah Stewart will be his first command. STORY: Navy Wants Men and Women in Combat Fleets They are among about 900 officers and 900 enlisted sailors who will be deployed to the Enterprise and work with the ship's 40 new sailors. Ostebo previously led the USS Theodore Roosevelt. The White House has called on the Navy to increase the number of women in combat jobs in response to a Department of Defense report that found women outperformed men in an Army infantry unit in basic training. The Navy has been rolling out more women for the past decade, starting with the USS Harry S. Truman, a destroyer, which launched in 2014.
